

HOUSE of HOPE®

ORLANDO
a home for healing teens

To Whom It May Concern:

House of Hope Orlando, the National Model, is a non-denominational, non-profit organization dedicated to helping troubled teens between the ages of 13-17. We provide a residential home, a safe haven where teenagers are nourished, clothed, protected, healed and reconciled with their families, whenever possible. We were pleased to work alongside Enough Is Enough (EIE) as it produced the Internet Safety 101 Program. Many of our teens shared their experiences about encountering online pornography, being targeted by adults in Internet chat rooms, socializing online, being bullied by classmates, along with the aspects of the Internet that are safe and enjoyable.

These testimonials and tips have been expertly woven into the four-part teaching series led by EIE President, Donna Rice Hughes. As Donna covers the dangers of pornography, sexual predators, and threats relating to online gaming, social networking and mobile devices, she and the experts at EIE provide motivation for adults and educators to protect children online. The other clinicians, law enforcement, industry experts and victims paint a vivid picture of the positives and negatives of the web.

We strongly encourage each of the 55 House of Hope affiliates across America to use the Internet Safety 101 resource to provide guidance education to the parents of the teens we work with, and we have found it a valuable tool to encourage dialogue and to provide helpful action steps to make the Internet safer for the parents and the kids. We believe that this is a critical resource that every parent should use to protect the children under their care, and we are pleased to have participated with Enough Is Enough in their mission.
